7	The Web Application Firewall appliance must provide a clear separation of network traffic through the use of dedicated interfaces. A dedicated data plane interface of 8 x 1Gig RJ45 & 2 x 10Gig SFP+ is required for the processing of web application requests and responses, and a separate, 1x1G dedicated management interface must be available for administrative tasks, management port for system configuration, and monitoring communication.
8	The proposed solution must comply following minimum SSL performance throughputs: 7.5K TPS, 43K RPS (RSA-2K) 4.5K TPS, 43K RPS (ECC P-256) Here RPS means Request per second and TPS means Transactions per second.
9	The WAF appliance must be a dedicated purpose built WAF appliance and not as add-on on Load balancer OR Third party Hypervisor & must have latency of <5ms
	Deployment Architecture
10	The proposed WAF solution must be entirely on-premises, ensuring that no data is transmitted to external networks or the internet. The only exceptions permitted are for signature updates and downloads related to OEM software components
11	The solution must support the following deployment modes for application traffic, with both HTTP and HTTPS supported in all modes. IOCL may select the deployment mode based on the specific requirements. The supported modes are: - Layer 2 Bridge - Layer 3 Reverse Proxy - Out of Band Mode
12	The WAF solution must support High Availability (HA) in both Active-Standby and Active-Active configurations in Data Center (DC). This HA solution must include session persistence, automatic configuration synchronization, and health monitoring."
13	High Availability (HA) must be supported for both: Layer 2 (Bridge) deployments Layer 3 (Reverse Proxy) deployments
	Management Server
14	The WAF solution architecture must incorporate a central management server or platform that provides a single pane of glass for all operational tasks. This includes, but is not limited to, reporting generation, security policy lifecycle management, alert aggregation and analysis, configuration of web application security controls, and the centralized administration of all monitoring gateways within the deployment. Access to the management interface must be supported via a standard web browser.

15	The dedicated management server within the proposed solution must provide administrators with flexible management options, including a secure Web GUI accessible via HTTPS on a standard browser, and a command-line interface (CLI) accessible through SSH for efficient and secure administration.
	Security Features
16	The proposed security solution must include a feature for automated discovery of web application infrastructure. The solution should then automatically add these discovered servers, as protected assets under its management.
17	The WAF solution must enhance its security posture through an "Automatic Profile" feature. This feature will continuously analyze application traffic to learn its expected structure and behavior, establishing a positive security model that enables the detection and mitigation of deviations indicative of both known and emerging threats, requiring minimal manual tuning.
18	Utilizing an "Automatic Profile" capability, the WAF solution will dynamically build a baseline of legitimate application activity, encompassing URLs, directories, and form field values, including learning their expected data types (numeric, alphanumeric, alphabets) and length constraints. By identifying and responding to requests falling outside these learned norms, the solution provides an added layer of protection against a wide range of attack vectors.
19	The automatic application profiling capability must extend beyond simple URL learning to provide granular control over individual parameters within web requests. The solution should automatically discover and profile parameters, learning their expected data types (e.g., numeric, alphanumeric), allowed lengths, and permissible values or value patterns. This granular parameter profiling must enable the WAF to enforce strict validation rules, preventing attacks that involve malformed or unexpected parameter values, thereby significantly reducing the attack surface.
20	The automatic profiling mechanism must establish a robust understanding of the protected application's adherence to HTTP protocol standards. This includes learning expected HTTP methods (e.g., GET, POST), header usage, content types, and request/response formats. The WAF should automatically detect and block traffic that violates these learned HTTP protocol norms, effectively mitigating various evasion techniques and protocol-based attacks.

21	The "Automatic Profile" feature must learn and categorize application access patterns by analyzing specific URLs and grouping them into URL Patterns to understand the logical structure of the web application. This includes identifying dynamic elements and creating generalized patterns for efficient security policy application.
22	The solution's automatic profiling capability must analyze Headers in HTTP requests and responses to learn expected usage and enforce HTTP protocol compliance. This includes identifying mandatory, optional, and custom headers, as well as their typical values and formats, to prevent header-based attacks and ensure proper communication.
23	The "Automatic Profile" must track cookie behavior, including the names, values, attributes (e.g., secure, HTTPOnly), and typical lifecycles of cookies used by the application. This learning should enable the WAF to detect anomalous cookie manipulation attempts and enforce expected cookie usage patterns for enhanced session security.
24	The automatic profiling feature must incorporate users tracking to establish behavioral baselines for different user roles or groups interacting with the application. By learning typical access patterns and actions associated with specific user segments, the WAF can better identify and respond to potentially compromised accounts or insider threats exhibiting unusual behavior.
25	The "Automatic Profile" must maintain a record of learned hosts that legitimately access the application, effectively creating a baseline of trusted sources. This information can be used to identify and potentially restrict access from unknown or suspicious hosts, enhancing protection against external threats and unauthorized access.
26	The "Automatic Profile" feature must continuously learn and adapt all the aforementioned elements – URLs, URL Patterns, Headers, Cookies, user tracking data, learned hosts, and insights into susceptible directories and URL graphs – to accommodate legitimate application changes and maintain an accurate security posture over time without requiring constant manual updates.

27	The WAF solution must feature an "Automatic Profile" capability that tracks the learning status of application URLs, providing visibility into which URLs have been fully analyzed. Upon reaching a defined confidence level, the solution should automatically transition learned URLs into protection mode, allowing for a phased security deployment where some application areas are under active protection while others continue to be automatically profiled.
28	The WAF solution must provide a Correlated Attack Validation capability that intelligently examines multiple attributes – including adherence to HTTP protocol standards, deviations from the learned application profile, known attack signatures, the presence of suspicious special characters, and the reputation of the requesting user – to provide a high degree of confidence in identifying and responding to genuine attacks while minimizing erroneous alerts.
29	The WAF solution must employ a correlated attack validation mechanism that assigns confidence scores to individual security violations. This system should then analyze the cumulative confidence score within a session or request, triggering enforcement actions only when a predefined aggregate threshold is exceeded, thereby reducing false positives from isolated, low-confidence events.
30	The correlated attack validation engine must analyze the temporal sequence of security violations, recognizing patterns of related malicious activity occurring within a specific timeframe. By identifying suspicious sequences of events, the solution should differentiate between isolated anomalies and coordinated attack attempts, leading to more accurate threat detection and response.
31	The WAF solution must be capable of correlating different types of security violations within a single request or session. For example, the system should be able to identify a higher risk when a SQL injection attempt is followed by a cross-site scripting probe from the same source, increasing the confidence in the malicious nature of the activity and triggering appropriate action.
32	The correlated attack validation should leverage the automatically learned application profile to enhance its accuracy. Violations that deviate from the established baseline of normal application behavior, when occurring in conjunction with other security triggers, should be assigned a higher confidence score, improving the ability to identify genuine attacks that attempt to exploit application-specific vulnerabilities.
33	The solution must provide the following features and protection.
	- HTTP (1.x and 2) protocol validation

	- Web service layer correlated attack validation
	- HTTP protocol attack signatures
	- Web service layer customized protection - Cookie signing validation
	- Anti site scrapping
	- Web profile protection
	- Web Form protection
	- Web application attack signatures
	- Web application layer customized protection - OSCP protocol validation
34	The WAF solution must be capable of automatically discovering the content type of HTTP traffic, irrespective of the Content-Type header's value or existence. This functionality is critical for the WAF to correctly parse and subsequently protect HTTP requests that may have missing or misleading content type declarations.
35	The proposed solution must incorporate comprehensive regular expression functionality to enable: a. Signature definition: Creating sophisticated rules for identifying a wide range of threats. b. Sensitive data definition: Identifying patterns corresponding to confidential data for data loss prevention. c. Parameter type definition: Specifying expected formats for application inputs. d. Definition of host names and URL prefixes: Defining target application scopes based on network addresses and web paths. e. Fine tuning of dynamically learned parameters: Precisely adjusting security rules applied to automatically discovered parameters.
36	The proposed solution must provide a range of configurable actions to be taken when an attack or unauthorized activity is detected, including: terminating the current HTTP request and response, closing the underlying TCP connection, preventing further access for the identified application user, and blocking network traffic from the originating IP address.
37	The solution must have a GUI based option to create policies to detect and block Double encoding attacks.
	Threat Intelligence
38	The WAF solution must support near-real-time threat intelligence feeds encompassing a wide range of known threat sources. These must include at a minimum , anonymous proxies, comment spam IPs, geo-location-based threat indicators, IP forensics data, known malicious IP addresses, phishing URLs, and TOR exit nodes. The feeds must be automatically updated and integrated with the WAF for dynamic detection, alerting, and enforcement.

39	The WAF solution is required to support and actively utilize threat intelligence feeds that provide information on known scanner IP addresses and IP addresses associated with SQL injection attempts. The system must automatically receive and process updates to these feeds in near real-time to enable dynamic detection, alerting, and blocking of identified scanner activity and potential SQL injection attacks.
40	The proposed WAF solution must demonstrate full compatibility and integration with signature feeds containing patterns and rules for the detection of Spamdexing and Remote File Include (RFI) attacks. The solution must provide mechanisms for automatic updates of these signature feeds and their active application within the WAF's inspection and blocking processes.

This functionality must be achieved without requiring the upload of Swagger, OpenAPI, or similar specification files. Capabilities must include: • Discovery of API hosts, base paths, resources, and endpoints • Identification of API accessibility (internal, direct external, indirect external) • Classification of sensitive data within APIs and associated risk scoring • Detection of newly introduced, modified, or shadow APIs
42	The API security solution must perform deep inspection of API requests and responses, including headers, parameters, and body, to the data type level. This should include: Detection and classification of sensitive data within API traffic. Identification of authentication locations and states. Analysis of API parameters for vulnerabilities.
43	The API Security solution must be capable of detecting and classifying sensitive data.
44	The API security solution must detect a wide range of API-specific threats and vulnerabilities, including: OWASP API Top 10 vulnerabilities (e.g., BOLA, Broken Authentication, Mass Assignment etc). Unauthorized access and unauthenticated API usage.

45	The API security solution must include the ability to assess API vulnerabilities, including: - Automated vulnerability scanning and testing of API endpoints. - Analysis of API specifications for security risks and compliance. - Generation of test packages for API security testing.
46	The API Security solution should be fully integrated with the On Prem WAF system from the same vendor.
47	It should also support Integration with API gateways and management platforms to facilitate streamlined API security policy enforcement and management.

49	The solution must provide dashboard capabilities that include displaying data types within each API and the ability to mark data as sensitive or non-sensitive.
	Bot Security
50	The solution must provide a dedicated threat intelligence feed and service for bot protection. This service must include the capability to classify traffic with a high degree of accuracy into categories such as: - Human traffic - Known good bots - Known malicious bots - General bots - Unknown or new bots
51	The solution must provide the ability to apply a range of actions to traffic identified as bot activity. These actions must include, at a minimum: - Blocking of malicious bot traffic - Detailed monitoring and logging of bot activity
	Dashboards and Reports
52	The Web Application Firewall solution must include intelligent alert aggregation. This feature shall analyze and correlate related security events based on timeframe and context (e.g., source IP, target application, attack patterns) to present them as single, consolidated alerts.
53	This aggregation should provide the following advantages: reduced alert volume, enhanced threat context, improved incident prioritization, and streamlined investigation.
54	These aggregated alerts shall include a vertical graph displaying the temporal or frequency-based distribution of the underlying attack events for improved visual analysis.

55	The Web Application Firewall solution must be able to log Application Usernames along with IP address in security alerts , associated with web traffic by inspecting HTTP authentication details.
56	The proposed security solution must generate security incident alerts that include a detailed explanation of the detected attack. In addition to this description, each security incident alert must contain an embedded hyperlink to comprehensive documentation explaining the specific attack type that triggered the alert. For example, if the system detects and flags a "Cross-Site Scripting (XSS)" attempt, the alert must include a direct link to documentation explaining XSS vulnerabilities, attack vectors, and mitigation techniques.
57	A dedicated IP Reputation dashboard shall be a core feature of the solution, providing a comprehensive overview of malicious IP addresses detected, along with their assigned dynamic risk scores, for all relevant traffic. The risk scoring system must utilize a scale of 1 to 100 to represent the varying levels of threat posed by each IP address.
58	To provide actionable intelligence, the IP Reputation dashboard must present a historical timeline of attack types associated with each malicious IP address for the last two weeks. This information will allow security teams to better understand the attacker's tactics and potential targets.
59	To provide insights into targeted attack patterns, the IP Reputation dashboard must display a breakdown of malicious IP activity. This visualization should identify the industries most frequently targeted by IPs with a negative reputation, including the percentage of malicious traffic directed at each sector.
60	The solution must provide a set of pre-defined reports, including but not limited to: A report detailing the top 10 security violations detected.
